Forest for the TTC

SCARBOROUGH

City considers razing woodlot for subway, councillor says

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

When it comes to building the Scarborough subway, the city appears to be stuck between a rock and a park place.

According to Coun. Glenn De Baeremaeker, the TTC is considering razing a portion of the Frank J. Faubert woodlot to build a staging area for future subway construction.

The five-acre park near Ellesmere and McCowan roads was the site of a conversation battle years ago, when environmental activists saved it from being converted to condos.

De Baeremaeker called the woodlot one of the "defining characteristics" of Scarborough and said he will oppose any plan to cut it down.

"There's zero chance it happens," the Ward 38 councillor said. "Why anybody in their right mind would even put it down as an option is beyond me."

However, preserving the park puts the TTC in a bind. The other option for the staging area is a nearby strip mall parking lot — a plan that would require expropriating local businesses and residential homes.

Commercial tenants of the plaza have already inquired about compensation should they be displaced, but De Baeremaeker believes the cost is worth it to save the woodlot. "This forest was there before we were born, and it will be there after we pass on and our great grandkids are running the city," he said.

Big city, big data — T.O. lagging behind

URBAN PLANNING

City needs to harmonize info like other cities

Toronto is losing ground in the global race to use data, sensors and other high-tech tools to improve city services, engage citizens and create and keep digital jobs.

What it lacks, compared to London and others, is a force that prods innovators to work together.

"It maybe needs a little bit more leadership and co-ordination," said Mark Kleinman, director of economic and business policy for Sadiq Khan, London, England's newly elected mayor.

The mayor's office there has spurred collaborations that let communities use a crowdsourcing website to raise funds to improve streets, and created a privately developed app that helps commuters know how crowded transit is, based on real-time sensor data.

There is no shortage of such technology here. Waterfront Toronto is ensuring new shoreline developments have lightning fast Internet. Toronto Public Library has an "open data" website, offers Internet to low-income kids by loaning mobile hot spot devices and has in-branch "digital innovation hubs" where anyone can use 3D printers.

Toronto has its own "big data" team that will soon let Torontonians track average travel speeds on all city roads for the past four years, and 90,000 route records of cyclists who volunteered smartphone GPS data. Each organization, however, is mostly doing its own thing. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

INTERVIEW

Using the cloud as a force for good

As the first-ever chief information officer in the United States, Vivek Kundra pushed the idea of using public data for public good.

Here he talks about how Toronto is ripe for innovation. This interview has been condensed.

How do we evolve?

A year ago I wrote about one of our committees considering a contract to update from an email system from the '90s just to get city staff onto Outlook. How do we go from that to cloud computing?

It's leadership — you hold executives in charge of the operations that they're responsible for accountable for it. At the end of the day, you're operating in the interest of your citizens. Taxpayers deserve for the city to move forward. And frankly, if you look at the growth in the population and … growth in the budget, the only path is innovation.

Should there be criteria for what gets released?

We need to define what a high-value data set is: a data set that has economic impact; it has impact on citizens' lives. So, you can be much more targeted, while making sure you're abstracting personally identifying information.

How do you decide what data to release?

Is it enough for the city to release data and sit back and wait for startups and interested parties to do something with it and offer that back — or should the city be more proactive in trying to do something to benefit the public?

I think you have to do both. (First) release the data: the way I think of that is it's like a grocery store, and that's kind of the raw materials. But then the city should encourage an ecosystem of developers and startups to build on top of (the data), and that would be the equivalent of different restaurants you could create.

Kids imagine Eglinton Avenue in the year 2021

Chris Bateman
For Metro | Toronto

The future of Eglinton Avenue is bright, according to the neighbourhood kids.

A Metrolinx drawing competition attracted more than 100 colourful depictions of what Eglinton Avenue will look like when Crosstown LRT construction wraps up in 2021.

All of the drawings show happy riders enjoying a vibrant city made possible through public transit.

A group of judges that included Coun. Joe Mihevc, Coun. Josh Colle, and MPP Mike Colle selected 17 of the drawings to appear on fencing around the LRT construction sites.

"I think it's important to speak to (kids') curiosity and to allow them to participate in some way," said Franca Digiovanni, a communications manager at Metrolinx.

"They're so curious about what's happening in their neighbourhood and what's happening in their city," she said.

Eleven-year-old Tyler Burgess, who lives near Eglinton and Bathurst, was among the competition winners.

He drew the LRT at Bathurst station and decorated it with artwork inspired by Toronto's Bayview subway station and the Montreal Metro.

"It's important to have art because we don't want to have a dull station that's pretty boring," he said.

"It's very interesting to think of what we will have in the next four years," he said. "Sometimes I get a little annoyed about the construction, but when it's done I'll be happy to ride it."

Access to public transit like the Eglinton-Crosstown LRT can provide a lot of mobility benefits for kids and their families, said Matti Siemiatycki, an associate professor of geography and planning at the University of Toronto.

"If we can figure out how to build the types of communities they're envisioning, there's a lot of opportunity there. That's the challenge for us grown-ups," he said.

AMBITION

All 100 libraries, by transit

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

Five-year-old Jackson Ryan Bennett has a big project he'll be working on this summer.

It's not to eat the most Popsicles or to run through every sprinkler on his street. Instead, he wants to visit all of Toronto's 100 libraries on public transit.

His dad, Lanrick Bennett Jr., said Jackson picked the first branch, Fort York, in early April out of Daniel Rotsztain's adult colouring book All The Libraries Toronto, and just wanted to keep going from there.

"We just started randomly throwing ourselves all across Toronto," said Bennett.

"I'm a huge urban nerd, and I kind of instilled that into my son, in a way, and we love libraries," he added.

"(Jackson) loves the fact that every library is unique, it's got a different look, different people, and the fact that we're travelling all around Toronto, he gets to see the entire city."

So far, the pair, sometimes joined by Jackson's eight-year-old sister Zoë when she's not busy with dance classes, have made it to 24 branches.

They've taken subways, streetcars, buses and even the Scarborough RT, on a recent visit to the Port Union branch.

"That was a long day," said Bennett with a laugh.

Giant skyscraper looms

BLOOR-YONGE

'The One' just awaits regulatory approval

Chris Bateman
For Metro | Toronto

A plan to build the tallest skyscraper in Canada at Yonge and Bloor is coming into focus.

Dubbed "The One" by developer Sam Mizrahi, the $1-billion condo tower is expected to reach a whopping 304 metres at 1 Bloor St. West.

The next tallest skyscraper in Canada, First Canadian Place at King and Bay streets, is 298 metres.

The future of the project was due to be decided by city council this summer, but Mizrahi decided to go straight to the higher Ontario Municipal Board for a chance at a quicker approval.

"We had a contractual obligation, we had to do it," he said. "I want to continue to work with the city to get the approvals.... We anticipate having community council support on the 14th and then city council in July."

Mizrahi said construction could begin this year if the city or the OMB sign off on the blueprints, but he's not looking to alter the height or other parameters already agreed with Toronto's planners.

"We're not looking to deviate at all," he said. "I think it's going to be an incredible enhancement to the neighbourhood. I think it's really going to put Toronto on the map from an international architecture standpoint."

Not everyone is sure. At 418 units, the development could add hundreds of new residents to the area, prompting concerns about density.

Among the amenities Mizrahi has pledged to provide are an underground connection to the Bloor-Yonge subway station and a substantial contribution to the city's Section 37 fund for community enhancements.

"The stakeholders recognize that we are in a downtown environment," said Michael Landry, the president of the Greater Yorkville Residents' Association.

"These are prime corners and there's going to be development there. The issue is to make sure the development takes into account the livability of this area."

The historic Stollerys mens store was demolished in January, 2015 to make way for "The One." Developer Sam Mizrahi hopes to complete the building (rendering right), which is expected to be the tallest residential structure in Canada by 2020 or 2021. LIZ BEDDALL/METRO (RIGHT: CONTRIBUTED)

League reels over child porn charges

A youth baseball program in Toronto has sent a note to parents saying a man who worked as a part-time coach has been arrested on child pornography charges. The note encourages parents to speak with their children about their interactions with him.

The Leaside Baseball Association distributed the email to parents following the arrest, on May 24. The coach spent about six months working with children playing minor peewee AA, from last November through April.

Minor peewee baseball players are typically 12 or younger.

Eric Stickney, an executive with the Leaside association, said the part-time coach left the team in early May because of unrelated logistical issues. The charges were laid weeks after he had left the organization.

Timothy Kendall, 29, has been charged with possessing and accessing child pornography. He is scheduled to appear in court again June 16, at Old City Hall.

Subway miscalculation to cut taxpayers deep

TTC

Lawyers advise councillors to settle up with developers

5,500

Senior officials acknowledge that a would-be 2015 peak ridership of 5,500 used in the city's calculations was flawed.

Staff miscalculations on the ridership of the Scarborough subway will leave taxpayers on the hook for millions more, after city council voted to settle a dispute with developers.

According to a secret report before council on Tuesday, the contents of which were shared with the media, the city's lawyers advised councillors to accept a settlement with the group representing developers, the Building Industry and Land Development Association (BILD).

The settlement, which reduces the amount builders will have to pony up to help finance the subway, is expected to cost the city as much as $6 million in lost revenues.

There had been concern that staff would be forced to acknowledge at a public hearing that at least one of their own ridership calculations was wrong — an admission that casts further doubt on city's planning process for the controversial project.

BILD challenged the city's calculations on ridership and development fees at the Ontario Municipal Board last year.

The city's lawyers said in the confidential report discussed Tuesday that councillors should accept the settlement offer because the city stands to lose even more if its numbers were to face further scrutiny at the public OMB hearing. Councillors agreed to support it, directing the city's lawyers to attend a hearing scheduled for August.

Senior staff have acknowledged there was a rushed process to produce updated estimates of ridership on the proposed subway at peak hours — a standard calculation to determine what type of transit is most cost-effective. They reported that by 2031 there would be 14,000 people riding the subway at the busiest time in the busiest direction — a number that just barely justified the switch to a higher-capacity, more expensive subway.

While senior city officials continue to defend the 14,000 figure, they are now acknowledging a flaw in a related calculation. Provincial rules governing development charges say growth should pay for growth, meaning the city is not allowed to charge developers for costs related to how the subway would benefit existing development.

With that in mind, the city needed to come up with a baseline figure for how many people would have used the subway if it had been fully operational in 2015, before new developments might boost the figure. The number the city came up with was a peak ridership of 5,500.

BILD believed that 5,500 baseline was too low. A low starting figure would have the effect of exaggerating future ridership growth — and increasing the amount developers would have to shell out.

BILD argued the baseline number, lifted from a 2013 TTC report, didn't reflect potential subway riders but rather future ridership for lower-capacity options such as an improved SRT, an LRT or bus rapid transit.

CRIME

Deadly alley shooting off Eglinton Avenue

"Bang, bang, bang, bang, bang, bang. Then silence." Those were the sounds Murtaza Shah's brother heard just steps away from the alleyway where a man was slain in a brazen midday shooting on Tuesday near one of Toronto's busiest intersections.

Cowbell Lane, an alleyway behind the Minto Towers tucked south of the Yonge Street and Eglinton Avenue E. intersection, was the scene of a gruesome homicide. A man was shot multiple times while in his car, a white Range Rover.

He was pronounced dead at the scene.

"It's scary because me and my mom walk through there all the time," Shah said. "What if those idiots had missed him and hit me or my mom? It takes me two seconds to get here." Even for police, the deadly shooting, which occurred just before 3 p.m. came as a "big surprise."

"This is a very quiet neighbourhood, and not indicative of crime," said Supt. Reuben Stroble of 53 Division.

New chapter for beloved book store

RETAIL

Monkey's Paw to make move to Bloordale

One of the earliest adopters of the Dundas West neighbourhood as a hipster haven, the beloved Monkey's Paw rare book store, is moving to Bloordale.

The move mirrors a shift in the landscape of Toronto's quirky storefronts. As mom and pop shops exit the areas they defined, niche joints like The Monkey's Paw that had settled there for cheap rents and lack of competition follow.

Stephen Fowler opened the antiquarian book store at 1229 Dundas St. W. in 2006, a few years after moving to Toronto from San Francisco. He says the building that The Monkey's Paw is in was sold and its new landlord has threatened a "significant rent increase."

Plus, the street's fast gentrification has him a little spooked.

"The way this neighbourhood has changed seemed very sudden to me and so it went from being this kind of sleepy street to ... now it's like, 'Oh, let's go for a fancy brunch,'" Fowler said, sitting at the desk in his shop window.

He's looking forward to the change of scenery on Bloor Street. "It has a kind of grittiness that makes me feel like I'm in an actual city."

The book shop's new location at 1276 Bloor St. W. will open June 21.

"It's a nice long room, ideal for bookshelves, with very spacious display windows at the front, facing onto Bloor Street," Fowler had said in an email earlier, describing the storefront.

The Monkey's Paw is known for its oddball books — all used — hard-to-find special editions and enticing window displays. Don't fret, though, Fowler says at the new location, "we have some interesting ideas about how to use the windows; stay tuned about that."

Fowler acknowledged that Bloordale, too, may transition into something not so different from the "glossy" Dundas West.

"It does seem like it's a larger pattern just in North American cities, that the money is moving ... from the suburbs back into the centre of the cities."

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

Zane Caplansky was expecting another busy day serving deli sandwiches Tuesday. Instead, the owner of Caplansky's deli on College Street came to work to find out his landlord had abruptly shuttered the restaurant.

"I can't in any way understand what's going on," the outraged Caplansky told Metro, adding he was given no prior notice.

A notice taped to the door of the deli, signed by the S. Wilson & Co. Bailiffs, accuses Caplansky of "failing to effect repairs."

"The lease has been terminated, effective immediately," the note reads.

A representative at the bailiff's office refused comment, saying, "there's always two sides to every story. If the landlord took action, there's a cause."

Caplansky claims he's paid for all the repairs requested by the landlord, including, recently replacing the alarm system. The bill for the repairs was about $10,000, he said.

"As far as I was concerned, the matter was closed," he said. "Does he want to put up a condo? Does he have another tenant with more money?"

The restaurant has operated at 356 College St. since 2009, and currently employs over 50 people. It has recently begun branching out, with a food truck and other locations now open in Yorkville and Pearson airport.

"I mean, we never had better business. There's a lot of people who love us," he said. "If I'm not welcome any more on College Street, I'm sure there are other places to go."

Feds urged to boost funding for screening passengers

Canadians risk flight delays and even longer airport security lines unless Ottawa boosts screening funding to address growing passenger levels, industry experts are warning.

"It is on the cusp of being a real problem, with serious, serious delays," says John Gibson, chairman of the Canadian Airports Council.

Canadian airports aren't currently facing the chronic disruptions that are increasingly angering U.S. passengers. Still, lines have steadily grown over the last few years as Canadian funding hasn't kept pace with the 21 per cent increase in passenger growth over the last five years.

The Canadian Air Transport Security Authority (CATSA) says, on average, it screens 85 per cent of passengers within 15 minutes.

But waits can be much longer at some large airports during peak travel times, with additional pressure potentially coming during the rush of summer travel — and the number of passengers is growing by 3.5 per cent each year.

If nothing is done to address the bigger volumes, Gibson said, passenger waits could regularly reach an hour.

The number of security screeners has in the past fluctuated depending on the size of government funding. More than 6,000 agents screened 58 million passengers last year.

The agency says it's doing the best it can with the resources it's provided by the government. An extra $29 million in the Liberal government's first budget will help to maintain the current threshold this year.

"Based on the long-term funding that we have right now, if we don't get additional funding then, yes (lines will be longer)," said spokesman Mathieu Larocque. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Significant progress has been made to shorten screening lines since airlines reported thousands of frustrated passengers were missing flights, the head of the Transportation Security Administration said Tuesday. The agency said it is adding more lanes and increasing staffing. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ASSISTED DYING

Senators balk at limits

The federal government's proposed new law on medically assisted dying is entering uncharted parliamentary waters, where the only certainty seems to be that it will not come out in the same shape in which it goes in.

Final debate on Bill C-14 begins Wednesday in the Senate, where the government no longer has any control over independent-minded, less-partisan senators who appear determined to amend the controversial legislation.

Among other things, senators are likely to amend the bill to ensure that all grievously ill Canadians are entitled to an assisted death, not just those who are near death.

But no one knows what will happen if the government, which has rejected any substantive amendments thus far, refuses to accept Senate amendments. "Will senators acquiesce? Will they fight to defeat the bill? "I don't know — that's the simplest answer," said Sen. George Baker, who is sponsoring the bill in the Senate. THE CANADIAN PRESS

RCMP used 'deceit and tricks': Court statement

Illegal police tactics during an undercover operation that led a couple to be found guilty of terrorism-related offences endanger public rights, shock the conscience of Canadians and must be strongly condemned, says a statement of defence filed in B.C. Supreme Court.

John Nuttall and his common-law wife Amanda Korody were found guilty last year, but their convictions are on hold while their lawyers argue the RCMP entrapped their clients into planting what they believed were pressure-cooker bombs at the B.C. legislature.

The Mounties used "deceit and tricks" throughout the elaborate sting, read the statement of defence.

Nuttall's lawyer, Marilyn Sandford, told the court Tuesday that police aided and abetted terrorist activity by helping the couple design, construct and transport the homemade explosives.

"It matters not that the RCMP knew the devices would not explode," she said. "The RCMP knowingly facilitated terrorist activity."

Nuttall and Korody were arrested in July 2013 after an undercover operation that began five months earlier.

Sandford criticized what she called a lack of oversight on the operation, suggesting it would not have continued for as long had operational plans been properly communicated to RCMP superiors in Ottawa.

"Clearly, there is something inherently problematic about (police) setting up a pretend terrorist group," she said. "All of this ought to have been carefully considered."

The sting went from gathering intelligence about Nuttall, whose outspoken views on radical Islam had already flagged him to police, to an operation designed to see whether undercover operators could induce him to commit terrorist acts, Sandford said.

"There's nothing inherently wrong with targeting (a suspect) ... based on these facts. But it's the nature of the operation and the direction it took that became problematic," she said.

The Crown has not yet delivered its closing address but has already argued that Nuttall and Korody aspired to kill and maim innocent people in retribution for what they saw as Canada's disrespectful behaviour towards Islam.

Closing arguments are scheduled to run until the end of next week. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ants are on the march in Edmonton, with some exterminators reporting an increase of as much as 50 per cent.

Gladys Schultz, owner of Edmonton Exterminators Ltd., said the phone started ringing at the beginning of May.

"There's lots," she said. "And in our business, we're going to see them."

The tiny pests in question are what she calls ground or field ants, the tiny black or red insects particularly fond of lawns and other grassy spaces.

Biological services technician Mike Jenkins, the city's resident bug expert, credits their success to the recent warm, dry weather.

"Those are precisely the conditions that allow the ants to thrive. So they're building their nests in the dry soil, and when it's wet or cold they're not able to be as active or dig their nests nearly as well," he said.

According to Schultz, they aren't that interested in people ("unless you're standing on an ant hill, let's put it that way," she said) or sneaking into your house, but they pose a risk to vegetation.

"They ruin your lawn," she said. "They'll kill the grass if you don't get rid of them."

Jenkins isn't worried about the spike in population though, pointing out that their main sources of food is other insects, because they need the protein to feed their young.

"When they do that to other insects we consider pests, they're actually quite beneficial," he said.

However, he adds that ants also quite fond of the sugar they get from plant nectar, or from the bodily secretions of aphids, and they can get territorial about their sources, which sometimes makes them inclined to bite.

"If you're trying to grow prize roses or something that have aphids on them and the ants are protecting the aphids, they're going to be something you want to manage," he said.

"Having ants around can be a bit of a mixed blessing depending on your circumstances."

U.S. POLITICS

Clinton eyes general election as presumptive nominee

Already the presumptive Democratic nominee, Hillary Clinton pressed for victory in California and five other states Tuesday, while Bernie Sanders hoped a strong showing would raise doubts about her historic achievement and spur superdelegates to rally around him instead.

The Democratic race was coming to an end amid new turmoil in the Republican Party. GOP leaders recoiled at Donald Trump's comments about a Hispanic judge, with one senator even pulling his endorsement of the presumptive GOP nominee. Trump insisted his words had been "misconstrued" as an attack on people of Mexican heritage.

Clinton secured the 2,383 delegates she needed for the nomination on the eve of Tuesday's voting, according to an Associated Press tally. Her total is comprised of pledged delegates won in primaries and caucuses, as well as superdelegates — the party officials and officeholders who can back a candidate of their choosing.

"We are at the brink of a historic, historic unprecedented moment," she said during a rally in California on Monday.

Clinton was waiting until most of the voting was complete Tuesday night before fully revelling in becoming the first woman nominated by a major U.S. political party. She was to address supporters at a victory party in Brooklyn, where her campaign planned to run a gauzy video highlighting the achievements of women who helped clear a path.

Still, she was wasting no time moving toward the general election. Her campaign announced that she would make stops next week in Ohio and Pennsylvania, states that will be pivotal in November.

Sanders spent Tuesday making a final round of campaign stops in California, the biggest prize of the day. The Vermont senator hoped a victory would help in his so-far-unsuccessful bid to get Clinton superdelegates to switch their support.

"I think we've got a shot," Sanders said of his prospects in California. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EU seeks deals to slow migrant arrivals

The European Union unveiled plans Tuesday to seal agreements with African and Middle East countries in an effort to persuade refugees to stay close to home and to discourage people looking for jobs from heading to Europe.

The European Commission said that the agreements would target countries that migrants and refugees leave, travel through or stay in, often on their way to Europe.

The move is part of the EU's longer-term strategy to tackle the root causes of migration as the 28-nation bloc struggles to manage its biggest refugee emergency since the Second World War, with member states divided over what action to take. EU lawmakers immediately expressed concerns that the deals would be another attempt to outsource the bloc's migrant woes, like the much-maligned migrant agreement with Turkey.

The commission said the new partnership "compacts" would combine funds to build border, asylum and counter-smuggling capacities, as well as develop infrastructure and promote investment. Development and trade incentives would also be offered.

"We propose to use a mix of positive and negative incentives to reward those third countries willing to co-operate effectively with us and to ensure that there are consequences for those who do not," European Commission Vice-President Frans Timmermans told lawmakers in Strasbourg, France.

The main countries concerned are conflict-torn Syria's neighbours Jordan and Lebanon, where around two million Syrian refugees are sheltering. Senegal, Mali, Niger and Nigeria along the key migrant paths through western Africa are also targeted, as is Libya — where most migrants leave the African coast by boat for Italy — and its northern neighbour Tunisia. Ethiopia, where more than 700,000 refugees are sheltering, is on the list too.

But some lawmakers fear the agreements, which would not be legally binding, might see money and incentives thrown at countries already overwhelmed by migrants. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BROCK TURNER

Stanford defends handling of sex assault

Stanford University "did everything within its power" to ensure justice in the case of a former swimmer sentenced to six months in jail for sexually assaulting an unconscious woman, saying it moved swiftly to investigate and punish the student but that more needs to be done at the school and elsewhere to end sexual violence.

The university banned Brock Turner from campus after wrapping up its investigation less than two weeks after the attack, calling it "the harshest sanction that a university can impose on a student," according to a statement released Monday. The school says it reached out to the victim to offer support and inform her of the steps it was taking.

"In this case, Stanford University, its students, its police and its staff members did everything they could," the statement said, adding that it was proud of two students who stopped the January 2015 assault.

Carl-Fredrik Arndt tells CBS News that he and his friend happened to ride by on bicycles and saw Turner "aggressively thrusting his hips into her."

He said the woman was unconscious the entire time because he checked her and she "didn't move at all."

"The guy stood up then we saw she wasn't moving still. So we called him out on it. And the guy ran away, my friend Peter chased after him," Arndt said.

The 20-year-old Turner was sentenced last week to six months in jail and three years' probation, sparking outrage from critics who say Santa Clara County Judge Aaron Persky was too lenient on a privileged athlete from a top-tier swimming program. Some are urging he be removed from the bench. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Detroit prosecutor backs off man's 4 murder convictions

A judge on Tuesday threw out the murder convictions of a young Detroit man who pleaded guilty to killing four people when he was 14, a remarkable turnaround in a case that has been in doubt for years after a professional hit man stepped forward and took responsibility for the slayings at a drug den.

Judge Brian Sullivan acted at the request of the Wayne County prosecutor's office and lawyers for Davontae Sanford.

Car bomb attack kills 11 people in Istanbul

A car bomb hit a police vehicle in Istanbul during the morning rush hour on Tuesday, killing 11 people and wounding 36, the fourth bombing to hit the city this year.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility, but Turkey has seen a recent increase in violence linked to Kurdish rebels or to the Islamic State group, which has established cells in the country. The dead were seven police officers and four civilians. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Universities revamp menus

Food providers pressured to offer fresher meal options

Students want healthier meals, and Canadian universities seems to be listening.

The University of Toronto's downtown campus will cut ties with its food service provider, Aramark, this summer and start running most of its on-campus dining options itself.

It's the latest school to satisfy what appears to be an appetite for fresh meals.

It will centralize most food operations and see a main kitchen provide fresh food to some retail outlets that rely heavily on packaged food, said Anne Macdonald, the university's director of ancillary services.

Chefs, for example, will cook soups and sauces from scratch instead of ordering from a production facility, Macdonald said.

Such changes were called for by students, faculty and staff in focus groups, she said.

"This is the voice of the students," said chef Joshna Maharaj, who consults with universities and colleges on menu changes.

"They are increasingly dissatisfied — as they should be — with really highly processed foods and a campus food service that is sort of an irritating afterthought."

Last year, the Canadian Federation of Students voiced concern over the quality of campus food across Canada after images surfaced of raw meat and mouldy food served at Memorial University in St. John's, N.L.

In Lethbridge, Alta., students voiced their desire for healthier options and local ingredients when the University of Lethbridge debated whether to renew Sodexo's contract in 2012, said James Booth, executive director of ancillary services at the school.

"They're much more astute consumers and they have more refined needs," he said.

Booth compared the evolution of menu offerings to that of residence amenities. Twenty-five years ago, students lived in basic dormitories, he said.

"Today they have granite countertops, and they have flat-screen TVs and Wi-Fi and Netflix," he said. "You have to keep up."

Maharaj said it's important for food service providers to be open to working with their clients to figure out how to better serve their needs.

"I think that they really could be allies and change agents, if we position them well and support them and ask them to do these different things."

CRTC stifles competition, says Maxime Bernier

The CRTC has discouraged competition in the telecommunications sector and should have a far diminished authority over the industry, Conservative leadership candidate Maxime Bernier said Tuesday. The CRTC has stifled competition with some of its decisions, he said, citing as an example the regulator's ruling last year that requires major Internet service providers to sell space on their high-speed infrastructure to smaller rivals at wholesale prices. The CRTC said it had no comment on Bernier's position. THE CANADIAN PRESS

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD
ON THE RETURN OF A RALLYING CRY

Rape culture was a slogan that undermined its cause by being too vague. But this week, Dan Turner, the father of sex offender Brock Turner, has upended all that.

"Rape culture" had become a barren phrase.

Jargony and overused, chanted with abandon and often wielded with little insight, it had lately lost much of its meaning. Coined in the 1970s to describe how society implicitly condones sexual violence and blames victims, rape culture was the slogan that undermined its cause by being too vague.

But this week, Dan Turner has upended all that. He has given rape culture, as short-hand, a second wind — and a snappy quote few will soon forget.

Turner is the father of convicted sex offender Brock Turner. In front of a California courtroom, he dismissed his son's groping, fingering, humping and undressing of an unconscious woman behind a dumpster as a mere "20 minutes of action."

And with that, "rape culture" is back in the discourse with renewed vengeance.

Turner's statement spawned stories and made headlines across international media when it hit Twitter this weekend, after his son's conviction on three charges of sexual assault and the ensuing light sentence, a mere six months in jail plus probation.

Rape culture persists when perpetrators receive kid-glove treatment.

Like his son, who has never admitted guilt, Turner senior shows zero recognition of the assault as such. He calls it the "unfortunate results" of campus binge drinking, deems it one of the "dangers... of sexual promiscuity."

NOT A PARKING-LOT PREDATOR A prosecutor's comment that Brock Turner 'may not look like a rapist' proves how pervasive misconceptions about sexual assault are, Rosemary Westwood writes.

DAN HONDA/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There's nary a whiff of culpability. That makes Turner the poster boy for rape-culture-condoning parents.

Mashable's Chris Taylor explained phenomenon well. "Rape culture is a thing..." he wrote to fellow fathers. "Any time you put the onus on our daughters — don't wear that dress, don't get drunk, don't lead guys on — you're perpetuating it. Any time you make a rape joke, you're perpetuating it. And any time you miss an opportunity to educate our sons about the concept of consent ... you're perpetuating it."

Amazingly, Dan A. Turner not only thinks his son shouldn't go to jail for ripping the underwear off a passed-out woman and groping and fingering her, he thinks his son should educate other students about sex and booze on campus.

Leslie Rasmussen, Brock's friend, was more explicit in her plea to the judge: "Brock is not a monster," she said in a statement. "Rape on campus isn't always because people are rapists," she added, ludicrously, explaining that Brock isn't a real rapist because he didn't kidnap his victim "as she is walking to her car in a parking lot."

The prosecutor was clearly expecting this kind of retrograde thinking when he told the jury during his closing arguments that Brock "may not look like a rapist," being young, white and privileged, "but he is the face of campus sexual assault."

The need to make that statement is proof of rape culture's existence. But it's Turner, the father, who's given it a new face.

A close runner-up isn't Rasmussen, but the judge. Judge Aaron Perksy clearly felt sorry for the convicted All-American swimmer formerly of Stanford University, the judge's own alma mater. In announcing a six-month sentence, compared to the six years requested by the prosecution, Perksy said Turner had "less moral culpability" because he was drunk and let him off easy because jail would be "severe." For that, he's earned infamy and more than 300,000 signatures on a petition demanding he be recalled. I hope it works.

Rape culture persists when perpetrators — especially white, athletic, good-looking ones — receive kid-glove treatment from judges who follow the old adage "boys will be boys." It endures while well-meaning people explain away the sexual violence of their loved ones.

But thanks to Turner's "20 minutes of action," rape culture has also returned to prominence as a war cry. It's been given new weight, and been rooted again in reality. The truth: A father excuses every assault when he excuses the one committed by his son.

A balloon ride taught me not be defined by illness

Samantha Emann
Metro | Toronto

If you had asked me two years ago whether I would go for a ride in a hot air balloon, I would have laughed.

But here I was, in Kitchener, Ont. at 5 a.m., listening to a pilot tell a group of soon-to-be passengers, myself included, how to brace for bumpy landing as we prepared to be lifted thousands of feet into the air.

I was there to participate in Parkinson Canada's Life Lists Challenge campaign where one could find themselves doing other bucket-list type things like skydiving and bungee jumping.

I don't want to be the sum of my medical issues.

Participants raised much-needed money for research on a disease for which there is no known cure, for public education and to help support the more than 100,000 Canadians living with it. This event was unique, as you got to be inspired by a partner with Parkinson's, putting a human face to the fundraising efforts.

The world watched iconic figures like the late Muhammad Ali live with Parkinson's, but not let it define them. Ali will be remembered for his accomplishments and his many contributions to the society and time in which he lived, not for the tremors that affected him later in life.

Jon Collins, the organizer of the campaign, said the balloon challenge seemed to be relatable for all age groups for different reasons. He said the idea of doing something you want to tick off your bucket list would be a new way to engage younger people, particularly millennials.

"This could be you, this could be me, at this exact stage in my life looking to raise a young family, working hard on my career and then (facing) a diagnosis that I was absolutely not expecting."

Though Parkinson's affects everyone differently, some symptoms include tremors and problems with balance and motor skills. The invisible symptoms of the disease, from fatigue to sleep disorders to other mental health issues, are equally challenging but not as often talked about.

That fact struck a chord with me.

After enduring bouts with depression and still fighting with anxiety, I am familiar with what it means to suffer from symptoms that aren't apparent to others. And having grappled with recent life-altering issues arising from my weight, I understand what it means to feel like you are fighting your own body.

I don't want to be the sum of my medical issues. I used to think going up in a hot air balloon would be out of the question. But after this? Sign me up for the next challenge!

Wake up your cooking with coffee

Park the skepticism — coffee pairs surprisingly well with fresh salad vinaigrettes as well as the tanginess of limes when used as a rub for grilled chicken legs. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

As the days stretch toward summer solstice on June 20 and the weather starts making all of us sleepy, try adding a zip to your cooking with coffee. In addition to an extra caffeine hit, you'll taste the warm, bitter aromas of coffee that go very well with some unlikely dishes.

It's already a given that coffee intensifies cocoa (try adding espresso powder to chocolate cake batter) and that it's an essential ingredient in desserts like tiramisu, but consider the flavour profile of coffee: bitter, slightly acidic and earthy.

Use it to balance out citrus and vinegary flavours; complement the smoky taste of smoked meats or grilled vegetables; contrast sugary desserts like ice cream and custards (affogato, anyone?); and enhance the nuttiness of caramels and brittles.

Summer is all about grilling, citrus notes and using the oven as least as possible. These recipes for a coffee-infused meal will keep you buzzed well past the sunset.

Grilled Lime and Coffee Chicken Legs

Lime marinades and coffee rubs are popular flavour choices for barbecues; try combining them for a complex, zesty way to flavour chicken legs.

The tanginess of lime hits the tongue but then the bittersweet coffee-sugar rub starts to shine.

(Makes 6 servings)

Ingredients:

- 1/4 cup (60 mL) fine coffee grounds
- 2 tbsp (30 mL) salt
- 2 tbsp (30 mL) sweet paprika
- 2 tbsp (30 mL) brown sugar
- 1 1/2 tbsp (22 mL) black pepper
- Juice and zest of 4 limes
- 2 finely minced garlic cloves
- 6 bone-in, skin-on chicken legs, trimmed of excess fat and skin, rinsed and patted dry with paper towels
- Chopped cilantro, for garnish
- Lime slices, for garnish

Directions:

1. In a large resealable plastic bag, add coffee, salt, paprika, brown sugar, black pepper, lime juice and zest and garlic. Massage bag to mix evenly. Add chicken, seal bag and massage to marinate chicken. Refrigerate for minimum two hours or overnight.

2. When ready to cook, remove chicken from bag and brush off excess rubs.

3. If using a charcoal grill, arrange coals on one side of grill and bring to medium-high heat. If using a gas grill, turn off one burner after grill has reached medium-high temperature. Sear chicken legs on hot side of grill for 4 to 5 minutes per side. Transfer to cool side of grill and cover, flipping occasionally until legs are fully cooked with an internal temperature of 165 F (75 C), about 20 to 25 minutes.

4. If not using outdoor grill, sear legs on a grill pan over medium-high heat. Turn heat down to medium, cover and flip occasionally until fully cooked.

5. Remove from heat and transfer to serving platter.

6. Garnish with lime slices and chopped cilantro. Let rest for 5 minutes before serving.

Scallops take centre stage

Fresh, plump scallops are the best option for skewers.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEAFOOD SKEWER

Quick and easy, they're perfect when paired up with prosciutto

Sucker for scallops? You're not alone. They're sweet, meaty, cylindrical and bite-sized. This particular recipe puts scallops at the centre of a skewer's worth of very tasty kebabs. It's quick and easy, requiring no more than 15 minutes hands-on time and 40 minutes total from start to finish.

First, buy the best scallops available. Sometimes, scallops are harvested, stored in water with preservatives, then kept at sea for days before the boat returns to shore. These are known as "wet" scallops, and are not recommended.

Instead, look for "dry" scallops or "day boat" scallops, which are caught and brought to market right away. Of these, you want the biggest, plumpest specimens you can find. Those are the ones that will most easily pick up nice grill marks when you set them down across the grates.

The bright, tangy citrus marinade here is a mixture of lemon juice, orange juice and the zest of both fruits, along with a little olive oil. It's your choice of herb — sage or basil — after which each scallop is wrapped in a strip of prosciutto. You want to be careful to fold the prosciutto and herbs around the scallops so they're flush with the scallops' edge. That will ensure the scallops cook evenly on the grill after they've been threaded onto skewers. How to ensure they don't stick to the grill? Pat them dry, then brush them with a little oil right before grilling.

The grill must be well heated before you start cooking. Once you're rolling, don't turn over the skewers until the scallops are easily loosened from the grill, which is how you know they've been properly seared. This will only take 2 to 3 minutes a side. Give each one a little poke in the belly to see if it's almost done. You want to pull them off the grill when there's still a little bit of give, indicating they're slightly undercooked. The carry-over cooking time will finish the job.

Citrus-marinated Scallop and Prosciutto Kebabs

Cooking time: Start to finish, 40 minutes (15 minutes hands on)
Servings: 4

Ingredients:

- 1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon freshly grated lemon zest
- 1 tablespoon fresh orange juice
- 1 teaspoon freshly grated orange zest
- Kosher salt
- 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil, plus extra for brushing the scallops
- 16 sea scallops, tough muscle discarded
- 8 thin slices prosciutto di Parma (about 4 ounces)
- 16 large basil or sage leaves

Directions:

1. Preheat the grill to medium.

2. In a medium bowl whisk together the lemon juice, lemon zest, orange juice and orange zest with a hefty pinch of salt until the salt has dissolved; whisk in the 2 tablespoons olive oil. Add the scallops and toss until they are well coated. Let them marinate for 8 minutes.

3. Cut the prosciutto slices in half crosswise and fold them into strips about 1 1/2 inches wide (the same width as the scallops) and 5 inches long. Arrange the strips on a work surface and place a basil leaf in the centre of each strip. Top the leaf with a scallop and wrap the prosciutto around the scallop to enclose it. Thread 4 prosciutto-wrapped scallops onto each of 4 metal skewers. (If using wooden skewers, soak them for 20 minutes in water before threading the scallops.)

4. Pat the exposed scallop surfaces dry and brush them lightly with olive oil. Place the skewers on the grill and cook the scallops for 2 to 3 minutes per side or until almost firm to the touch, transfer to plates and let rest for 5 minutes before serving.

So long Lassie, hello baby Ella

ANIMALS

Pet 'parents' taking a page out of human name books

Erin Kobayashi
Special to Torstar

In April, model Chrissy Teigen announced the birth of her daughter, Luna, with John Legend. I love the name Luna, it's feminine, celestial and easy to pronounce in many languages.

It's also the name of my dog — because Luna is clearly a dog name. It's an even better cat name (the Harry Potter and Sailor Moon reference became so popular that Toronto Cat Rescue advised fosters to stop naming their cats Luna). Or so I thought.

I began thinking of Luna's canine playmates and the list sounded like a kindergarten attendance sheet: Sophia, Ella, Riley, Oliver and Jack, and noticed that the top licensed cat, and even more so, dog names seemed to be taking cues from BabyCenter.ca's most popular baby names lists.

When my friend revealed that Edith was the front-runner name for her baby, I could only think of an acquaintance's hyperactive miniature pinscher-pug mix named Edith who appeared to run battery operated.

Are the days of Fido and Lassie dog-gone? While traditional dog and cat names like Buddy and Coco still rank high among licensed pets, I'm guessing their owners may be mature in age. Let's face it, you don't have to be a spring chicken to become a pet "parent." And I understand the appeal of modern baby names for dog owners because unlike cat owners, we are constantly addressing them in public.

> We are still trying to figure out what a pet is.
> James K. Stanescu

In a 2011 poll by Purina Dog Chow, 90 per cent of owners considered their dogs members of the family, so it isn't surprising pet owners are favouring trendy baby names since, culturally, they hold a special place in our hearts (and unique space in our homes).

"Companion animals are not wild animals, nor are they domesticated in the sense of farm animals. So, we have pets, which are like mini-humans to us," explains James K. Stanescu, a lecturer specializing in animal and environmental ethics in Philosophy at American University in Washington, D.C.

According to the same 2011 survey, 40 per cent of owners refer to themselves as "mom" and "dad" to their canine companions and I have noticed that descriptors like "fur baby," "practice baby," "first born" and "the roommate" are widely used.

"I think we have slowly tended to want to see pets as more of a member of the family," says Stanescu, "We give them more human names, as opposed to the old nicknames that we give to farm animals. But we also avoid calling them pets.

"They are fur babies, roommates, etc. We are still trying to figure out what a pet is, as opposed to a wild animal or a farm animal, both of which are categories that go back thousands of years."

While Stanescu points out that giving names to animals helps us recognize them as individuals, calling them fur babies and roommates is a stretch — considering our pets lack basic human rights.

"I think we have hard ethical choices we have to make about what it means to live with other animals that we have complete control over," Stanescu says.

"I worry that calling them fur babies or children or roommates is a way of dodging this really complicated ethical activity." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Looking out for the pregnant lady in prison

Daya (Dascha Polanco) struggles as a pregnant inmate on Orange Is the New Black. JOJO WHILDEN/NETFLIX

THE SHOW: Orange is the New Black, Season 3, Episode 4
THE MOMENT: The Smoke Break

Inmate Gloria (Selenis Leyva) sits outside the prison kitchen, smoking. Her son just visited. She's losing him; he's becoming a thug. Inmate Daya (Dascha Polanco), pregnant, joins her. The guard who promised to marry her and adopt her baby has vanished.

"Can I have a smoke?" Daya asks.

"What the hell is wrong with you?" Gloria snorts. "I swear to God, you were my kid" — her face falls — "you'd still be screwed up."

"Please," Daya says, sitting. "He's gone."

"I know," Gloria replies.

"F—ing piece of s—t," Daya says. "Like all of them."

"Yup," Gloria says.

"I can't believe he just left us," Daya says. Gloria glances at Daya's belly. She hands over a cigarette. "It's not the worst thing that'll happen to that kid," she says. She pulls Daya close. It's brief, but it's a hug.

With Season 4 about to drop, I thought I'd better catch up. Season 2 showed how one rotten apple, Vee (Lorraine Toussant), spoiled the prison's fragile equilibrium. So far, this season is digging into what I love best: telling character moments.

Statistics show that the majority of women in prison are there because of a man. That half-line, "Like all of them," says so much about how duped these women feel, how angry, how resigned.

The most consistently surprising thing about OITNB is its intimacy. Women want to be close to people — but how do you handle it when intimacy is forced upon you, when you share bedrooms, bathrooms, rages and sorrows, 24/7, with people you're wary of?

Revealing Ghomeshi book out in October

A book promising a comprehensive look at the "enormity of the allegations" against Jian Ghomeshi is due this October.

Secret Life: The Jian Ghomeshi Investigation from the Star's Kevin Donovan will explore the Ghomeshi abuse scandal while providing a behind-the-scenes look at the months-long investigation by Donovan and Canadaland podcaster Jesse Brown that led to the Star's exposé.

For Secret Life, Donovan interviewed 17 women and two men who allege abuse by Ghomeshi. Since news of Donovan's book first emerged, critics have alleged that Secret Life could reveal the identities of women who were originally promised anonymity.

Donovan, however, says that only women who have identified themselves publicly will be fully named in the book. Otherwise, pseudonyms will be employed.

"The suggestions that were made in the past that I was going to identify them are ridiculous," Donovan said. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

F-150 takes over roles friends used to have

Stephen Elmer
AutoGuide.com

No longer do you need a second set of eyes to check your trailer lights; the F-150 will do it for you. Need a buddy to hold a flashlight so you can work in the dark? Nope. The truck's mirror-mounted spotlights and bed-mounted LED lights will take care of illuminating your work.

Trying to back up a big trailer by yourself? Ford's new truck even makes that a breeze with almost no experience necessary.

The truck can even give you a massage. Now, if only the F-150 could pick up the next round of beers, it might be an even better friend than most!

Though its all-new aluminum body stole the headlines when the redesigned F-150 hit the market, the changes to this truck are more than just skin deep. And the strength of this package starts with the powertrain.

Our test truck came equipped with Ford's 2.7-litre EcoBoost V6, a turbocharged unit that is billed as a smaller and more economical option than the top-dog 3.5-litre EcoBoost. It makes 325 hp, but burying the throttle launches the truck with much more force than the numbers suggest.

In fact, gun to my head, I might be hard pressed to tell you if it is the 2.7-litre or the 3.5-litre engine providing power when the trucks are unloaded.

Besides being fast without a load, the turbos help to bring the torque on low in the rev range, providing good pulling power to get your trailer or payload on the move. The only downside to EcoBoost — and it has been since the first version of Ford's turbocharged engines were introduced — is fuel economy. While the official ratings peg this truck at 8.1 km/L combined, seeing averages of closer to 7.2 km/L isn't uncommon.

What really stands out on the F-150 is its handling. More so than any other half-ton pickup truck, the F-150 corners nice and tight, feeling light on its feet.

Big, heavy vehicles have a tendency to push wide through long sweeping corners, whereas the F-150 tucks in and urges you to keep on turning the wheel.

If it was pickup truck day at the race track, the F-150 will most certainly provide the most fun and least understeer.

For 2016, there is a new system that can't be ignored; Pro Trailer Backup Assist.

In short, the system allows you to control the movement of a trailer using a dash-mounted knob. And it works great. It takes the crossed wires out of reversing, with the left turn of the knob sending the rear of the trailer to the left.

As my dad always told me, it's better to work smart than work hard, and the F-150 is a genius when it comes to all those things that can make a hard day's work breeze by.

BMW 7 Series' super-fancy technology

GADGETS

This car takes innovation to the next level

Mike Schlee
AutoGuide.com

From the 14-speaker sound system to adjustable air suspension to filter out most road imperfections, the 7 Series takes its tech very seriously. BMW/HANDOUT

Of course, like any good flagship luxury sedan, the new 7 Series comes with all the expected technology like adaptive cruise control, head-up display, highly adjustable front power seats and a heated steering wheel. But from there, things get a bit crazy.

Available items include BMW's night vision system, active steering, an on-board Wi-Fi hotspot, dual digital display screens up front and 360 view cameras.

The driver can also use gesture controls to control basic infotainment system functions. Because pushing actual buttons? That's for plebes!

To keep occupants amused, there's a 1,400-watt Bowers & Wilkins diamond sound system that includes 16 speakers, many of which can be backlit for a bit of added flair at night. And while on the topic of lighting, fully customizable accent lighting is available as well a sky lounge LED roof that has thousands of LED lights built into the dual moon roof.

The Rear Seat is King

Rear seat passengers can be entertained by dual seat back entertainment screens that can also be used to control many of the car's primary functions. There is also a seven-inch touchscreen between the two rear seats that operates many of the same functions. Best of all, it's actually a fully functioning removable Android tablet as well, so you can use it to check your emails or play AngryBirds.

Of course, many of these features are included with the executive seating package that turns the right rear seat into a first-class airline cabin, complete with a fold-out table and a footrest. It, like the other three seats includes heat, ventilation and massage functions. The rear seats even include BMW's Vitality program that utilizes the rear display screens and massage motors to create a mild workout routine.

If all of this isn't quite enough rear-seat comfort, there are also powered sun shades for both rear doors and the rear window, four-zone climate control and heated front and rear armrests available. The 7 Series rides on an adjustable air suspension to filter out most road imperfections and all of the doors include soft close motorized technology.

But we're not done yet. Completing the uber luxurious 750i are three over-the-top features. First there's the ambient air package that allows occupants to spritz one of two scents into the cabin at varying levels of strength. Then there's the massive display key that includes a mini touchscreen to relay various amounts of information and control to the driver when not at the car. And finally, in some markets, the 7 Series can park itself into a garage remotely without anyone actually being inside the car.

But with all of this technology, why would anyone ever want to get out of the car?

Creativity is subjective. The truth isn't.

Don Draper's car is on the market

IN BRIEF

Hyundai readying 322 km EV

Hyundai will introduce electric vehicles with a longer range before the end of the decade. In a recent interview, Hyundai's director of its eco-vehicle performance development group, Byung Ki Ahn, confirmed that a 322-kilometre Hyundai electric vehicle will be introduced by 2018.

Range will go even further by 2020, when Hyundai plans on adding a 400 kilometre electric vehicle to its lineup. That's a major improvement compared to the Hyundai Ioniq EV that has a 177-kilometre range.

Own a piece of Mad Men

Love Mad Men? Love cars? Don Draper's 1964 Chrysler Imperial is crossing the auction block. Offered by ScreenBid, the 1964 Imperial Crown convertible was used in Season 4, Episode 3 and is one of 922 Imperial Crown convertibles ever built. They're so rare now that is it believed fewer than 200 exist today. ScreenBid brags that this 1964 Chrysler Imperial is the only Imperial to boast having been smoked in by Don Draper, when he drives it to visit the real Don Draper's wife in California. There's a bit of history about the car too, as many mistakenly refer to it as a Chrysler Imperial, including local DMVs when titling the car. In fact, Imperial was a separate brand after 1955, spun off by Chrysler to compete with Lincoln and Cadillac. This particular model was penned by famous auto designer Elwood Engel.

VANQUISH ZAGATO CONCEPT

Aston Martin's sexiest car in years

Dripping in sex appeal thanks to Italian design-house Zagato, Aston Martin has revealed the new Vanquish Zagato Concept. The car will be at the Concorso d'Eleganza Villa d'Este in Lake Como, Italy to show off its gorgeous new carbon-fibre body.

Aston reduced the split lines on the body by using large one-piece panels, while new lights and tail reflectors are meant to capture to classic Zagato look. Under the hood, Aston stuck with naturally aspirated power, opting for a V12 with 590 horsepower.

This is the fifth car that Zagato has styled for Aston Martin in as many decades.

"We pride ourselves on our strong partnership and the creation of the Vanquish Zagato Concept was a true shared experience," said Zagato CEO, Andrea Zagato.

"It represents the essence of an important design relationship that dates back over fifty years."STEPHEN ELMER/AUTOGUIDE.COM

SELF-DRIVING CARS

Drivers divided

A recent study has found that nearly half of drivers prefer to not have any self-driving features in their vehicles. University of Michigan researchers surveyed 618 drivers on their preferences with 45.8 per cent of respondents saying they prefer no self-driving. Nearly all of the respondents (94.5 per cent) said they would want to have a steering wheel plus accelerator and brake pedals or some other controls available.

Hall of Fame defenceman Scott Stevens will return to coaching as an assistant with the Minnesota Wild

Casey, Ujiri on the same page

RAPTORS

Team formally announces coach's new 3-year contract

There was never any real doubt in Masai Ujiri's mind that Dwane Casey was the man to coach the Toronto Raptors now and into the future, but in the immediate aftermath of an unprecedented yet unfulfilling run through the NBA playoffs, it became even more crystal clear.

The two men sat in an office the day after the Raptors were eliminated from the Eastern Conference final by the Cleveland Cavaliers and the mood was far more sombre than celebratory. There were no self-congratulatory pats on the back, no high-fives, few moments of euphoria.

There was disappointment and a realization that much work needs to be done, no matter how good the season had turned out.

"He talked about the things we need to get better at," Ujiri recalled Tuesday after formally announcing a three-year, $18-million contract for Casey to remain as the team's coach. "This is right away, when the run was over. And we started counting these things and, yeah, they're a lot, they're things that we need to work on, and I love that."

That is the tie that binds two disparate men, the 59-year-old coaching lifer from Indiana, Kentucky, Japan, Seattle, Dallas and Toronto, and his mid-40s Nigerian boss: a burning desire to win and win big, and a dogged pursuit of that goal that includes scant time to relish the triumphs along the way because there is always some area in which to improve.

They may not achieve the ultimate success but they are hell-bent on pursuing it together in Toronto. It is the enduring part of their relationship, the growth both seek.

"There's no coach I've worked with that has all the answers, we're continually learning," Casey said. "Once you stop learning, you might as well retire because there is always something new."

If Casey coaches out the term of his new deal, he will have spent eight years as the Raptors head coach, an astonishing run not only for the franchise but in an NBA where coaches are often fired willy-nilly, where a "fresh voice" is often mistakenly coveted over much needed consistency.

It is that constant message, constant delivery, constant "culture-building" that Ujiri seeks, even knowing there will be creative differences that pop up.

"Continuity is very, very important because you get to know people's tendencies, and trust me, it's not all holding hands and hugs," Ujiri said. "We argue, we disagree. But you walk out of that thing and you know you are one team, and no matter how big the disagreement, no matter how it is, for me (it is) what's the goal? We all seem to have that goal, along with the players."

Broncos to get a closer look at Talib's gunshot wound

Coach Gary Kubiak said Aqib Talib should return Wednesday to the Denver Broncos' headquarters where team doctors can evaluate the gunshot wound in his right leg.

The spectre of a ban swirls around Talib, who has had firearm incidents in his past.

OBITUARY

Slice dead at 42

Kimbo Slice, the bearded street fighter who parlayed his Internet popularity into a mixed-martial-arts career and worldwide fame, has died. He was 42.

Slice, whose real name was Kevin Ferguson, was taken to a hospital in Margate, Fla., near his home on Monday, said Coral Springs police Sgt. Carla Kmiotek.

The cause of death was still unclear. Kmiotek said there is no active police investigation and no foul play is suspected.

Slice was a strip-club bouncer and bodyguard who began competing in unsanctioned street fights in 2003. Videos of his violent knockout victories in those bouts became wildly popular online. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUESDAY in Ottawa

CANADA	BRAZIL

Substitute Janine Beckie scored deep into injury time to give Canada a 1-0 win over Brazil in Tuesday night's women's soccer friendly in Ottawa.

It was Canada's last match on home soil before the Rio Olympics.

Diana Matheson sent a high ball towards the Brazilian goal and Beckie, from outside the penalty box, lobbed substitute goalkeeper Luciana, who had just come on as a late injury replacement. It was the last kick of the game.

The Canadians had been after the goal all game. They pressed the action and had more and better scoring chances. As farewells go, it was a bright one with a hint of things to come.

Coach John Herdman wanted goals and while his team came close on numerous occasions — especially in the final stretch when it was one-way traffic — it took some 90-plus minutes to put the Brazilians away before 23,568 fans at TD Park.

Unlike its nervy start in Saturday's 2-0 loss to the South Americans before 28,604 at Toronto's BMO Field, Canada was composed from the get-go Tuesday and had the better of the play against a much-changed Brazilian starting 11. THE CANADIAN PRESS

RECIPE Salmon Tray Bake

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

There is no better strategy to get dinner on the table than to cook everything together. It's why we love a tray bake, especially this one since it delivers roasted flavor for the veggies and potatoes and flakey salmon.

Ready in
Prep time: 10 minutes
Serves: 4

Ingredients
- 2 new potatoes
- 3 Tbsp olive oil
- 2 tsp fresh or dried thyme
- Salt and pepper
- 4 salmon filets
- 1 bundle of asparagus, washed and trimmed
- 20 cherry tomatoes
- Big squeeze of lemon juice

Directions

1. Preheat the oven to 375 F.

2. Line a rimmed baking sheet with parchment.

3. Thinly slice potatoes and scatter them across baking sheet. Season with 2 tbsp of olive oil, pinch of salt, pepper and thyme. Place in oven for 15 minutes.

4. Remove tray from oven. Increase heat to 400 degrees. Lay the salmon filets over the potatoes and add the asparagus and tomatoes. Return to oven for 10 to 15 minutes, or until salmon is cooked.

5. Remove from oven. Squeeze lemon juice over the whole pan and serve.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
This is the perfect day to plan a vacation or make plans regarding the education of children. You might begin the necessary factual foundation for a creative project.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Sit down with family members to plan how to improve your home or how to help a family member. People are in a sensible mood.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
You're in a practical frame of mind, which is why this is a good day to tackle routine tasks you have been avoiding. Roll up your sleeves and get down to it.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
If shopping today, you will want to buy only long-lasting, practical items. You also will work hard, with a thought of saving for the future.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
The Moon is in your sign today, which makes you more emotional than usual. This also makes you luckier than usual. Use this to your advantage!

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
This is an excellent day to do research, because you will persevere and find what you're looking for. You'll be like a dog with a bone!

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Listen to the advice of someone more experienced today, because it will be valuable. After all, you don't have to reinvent the wheel. (Plus, you don't have to follow what he or she says.)

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You make a great impression on bosses, parents, teachers and VIPs today. Because you are conscientious and hard-working, they will love you!

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
This is a great day to study or finish a school paper. You will make great headway in matters related to publishing, the media, medicine and the law.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Use today's energy to clear away loose details regarding taxes, debt, insurance matters and inheritances. Listen to someone's advice about shared property.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
This is a good day to sit down with spouses, partners and close friends and have a serious discussion about practical matters. You will see that by keeping things orderly, it will be easier for everyone in the future.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
It's easy to work hard today, because you have the right mind-set. Physical discomfort is less important. Getting the job done is what matters.
